Band: Garagedays (A)
Genre: Heavy Metal
Albumtitle: Passion Of Dirt
Label: Massacre Records
Duration: 43:11
Releasedate: 28.04.2014

The austrian band exists since 2005. After 4 demo-releases (2007 "Wild And Dangerous", 2008 "Leather And Spikes", 2010 "Sight Of The Blind" and "Dark And Cold") the likewise "Dark and Cold" called debut followed. Now the second work follows and lets one pay attention.

Already during the first tones, one imagines how the band diaphoretically toils on the stage.

Here's a metal foundation mixing with a proper portion of snotty rock and punky energy. The guitars play hot riffs and also change in the direction of blues in more quiet moments. The (half-)ballads are really great done. The rest moves straight forward and the monstergroove of the drums contributes for that. The solos are accordingly crashing. It gets repeatedly leaded to earwig melodies, so that no boredom can arise. The songs are played crispy and accurately. Just as it has to be in this kind of music. Based on their entire presence, the band reminds me of Motörhead. The singer got the right dirt and energy to top off the whole thing. The album isn't trimmed to come out as old, however, but is absolutely settled in the present time. The production is pleasantly warm and sounds very naturally. Ralf Scheepers, who also took on the guest vocals of one track, delivers a fine job hereby.

Conclusion:

A great album with a mixture of energetic rock and a whole lot of metalpower. Recommendable for every fan of rock.
