On "World In Decay", Fallen Angels from Seattle present us Thrash Metal like fans of the genre know it from the eighties. Dirty, rough and with flippant vocals. The information sheet lists many giants of the genre who left their influence there, and as far as I am concerned, bands like King Diamond and Iron Maiden are most likely to come into my mind while I am listening to the album.

Concerning the riffing, the drums as well as bass and vocals there is nothing to complain about; everything is exactly realized how it is necessary to emphasize the old school touch in the right way. The guitars are shred properly, the drums are galloping through the song and the bass is coming into it's own discreetly but unmistakably. The slightly modern touch is provided through the mix, which is more of a benefit than a disadvantage for the overall impression.

Variety, for example as solos or short quieter parts, is provided sufficiently, so that nobody can feel bored. Also one considerably hears that these guys really have fun with what they are doing here.

Conclusion:

"World In Decay" from Fallen Angels is a solid Thrash album that flies the old school flag, appears quite homogenous and renounces experiments. It does not burst with innovation, but who needs things like these if one is served with a proper album that reminds of the "good old times"?

Rating 7/10
