Most of you will be aware what is meant with the term "running out the clock" in sports. If one tries to play out time while some actions take longer as usual. Unfortunately, it is also used in several albums. I checked several times whether the speakers had conked out as I couldn't hear anything. Though, Abhorrent Deformity have extended the pauses between the songs up to 20 seconds. Maybe the production is the reason for it, but such a running out the clock is more than annoying as the duration of the album by the guys from North Carolina is already short.

Although I honestly have to say that the stuff isn't enough for more than 30 minutes duration. It therefore sounds like one has heard it a million of times. The riffs, the grunting and nagging and also the blast beats and breaks. There is only one positive thing: The listeners escape influences of foreign genres like keyboards, female vocals and tromp.

Of course, the genre of Brutal Death Metal is extremely limited. Seen one, seen 'em all. However, no song sticks in my memory even after several runs, nor did I find anything that would warrant the price of an album.

I most likely think that the band had become a victim of bad habit to promptly creating a complete album. They were founded in 2013 and released their promo with 2 songs in 2014. Couldn't it be a powerful mini album in 2015?

Conclusion: The band accomplishes that boredom is coming up despite the short duration. One who likes to get to know any Brutal Death Metal Band should listen to it.
