"The busiest man in Black Metal" is back again – due to the promo sheet of the label. Every month there is a new release. Damn, why!? I don't understand what firstly "the artist" intends by this and secondly what a label thinks about it...mass instead of class? Well, then the "artist" and the label made it!

I'd like to anticipate possible reproaches of Vardan's fans (are they really existing?) namely this question: "Dude, when you think that his sound/creativity fucking sucks, why do you write reviews about it?"

It is quite plain. Basically I hold the genre dear. And in such cases I am gladly the pestilentialcontrol, the deadly incubus, the belial or the face of Orias who likes to eliminate such fucking bullshit. So, clear enough?

Well, let's talk about the music (and yes, unfortunately I have listened to it several times). He rattles and screeches again as familiar and it is a big yawn. The guitars fucking suck because there are once again Black Metal riffs of the cheap rummage table. The primitive work on drums is again so insolent, that a group of falling down beer heavers have more timing and rhythm. Also the odd interspersed keyboard parts sound like the first music lesson of the boy next door. The only difference to his latest album is another cover artwork. It is also gloomy and cheesy as there are not enough uncreative groats in Black Metal underground.

As far as I know, Vardan bears not really a meaning in the scene (if so, please send me an email). The flood of shitty releases will not positively impact this.

Finally, a word about the label Moribund:

If any company produces crap to tap something on the market, another firm is already there to produce even more crap and tries to exploit the purchaser. In that case one can only wait until all is hopefully adjusted by itself.

Conclusion:

When will the scene wake and stop letting impose such amateurish bullshit? Well, there will always be the true elite who celebrates crap as "oh so true" underground. They don't think that this bullshit strains and contaminates the scene and destroys it in the long run. Or should it be like that?
