There have been some great artists of the heavy metal section coming from the Netherlands alongside Onheil, Heidevolk or God Dethroned. My latest discovery is Tarnkappe with their upcoming disc "Winterwaker", which is delivered to the metal community at the beginning of December 2016 via Hammerheart Records.

The guitar sound is sharp with neat pressure and a captivating clarity. The guitars are the foundation of the disc. The riffing is played in a style similar to the old Darkthrone. It is a great example for showing that good black metal can do without any keyboards and synths, if the necessary structures and sound depths can take over. The vocals are traditionally nagged and, here and there, there are some clean pieces sung / spoken. The lyrics are written in their native language. The "furious" drums accompany the whole creative phase throughout the forty minutes.

Tarnkappe creates the connection between melancholy and pure cold as well as epic moments with raw aggression without the loss of energy and hardness. Particularly this can be seen, for example, in the songwriting of "De Hal Van Het Geheugen" towards the end. Since I think every single track is absolutely successful, I cannot name any special recommendations and can only recommend the album in its entire length. A great point are the compositions with their impressive, sonically phenomenal riffs.

Conclusion:

Hard, rough and yet full of variety and exciting melodies. Tarnkappe deliver classic black metal of the old school in an energized sound picture. The sound of the 90s mixed with a modern and impressive sound quality. Eight massive pieces can be heard here. A disc exactly how I like it and a mandatory purchase for the end of the year! Keep it up!
