After their debut album "Echoes Of The Rotting" (2007) Atrocious Abnormality from the USA finally put on the table their second album "Formed In Disgust". And the music is that heavy that the table almost collapses under this burden.

The trio, which had been a quintet from 2008 to 2010, took up seven years of time for the release but obviously they did not dedicate this time to their sound. Although the new sound appears richer, compared to its predecessor, and more professional concerning mastering and mixing, the (further) development of the band however is another thing.

In detail, one cannot reproach the band for anything. The guttural vocals throw clumps of hatred in front of everyone, the tank of a bass rolls through the battlefield and the drums set the really hard tones. But the flavourless taste, that all of this does not sound new remains, and reflects itself in the trivial song titles.

With a duration of not even half an hour, Atrocious Abnormality take it relatively easy with an intro of three minutes, a thing I really cannot understand. The remaining time is a nice slaughterhouse match but not able to emphasize its features with regard to unique arrangements. So, an entertaining but pulpy listening experience is arising, with no single song able to stand out from the other ones. This even applies for the title track.

Even if these song can be real neck breakers when played live, and already drone sinisterly out of the home loudspeakers, I cannot say that this is the best album ever. But all in all it can stand out from the mean value.

Conclusion:

There is no way around this album for those who like Brutal Death Metal. Their better songs, however, can be found on their debut album from 2007.
